CLEVELAND, OHIO — Lippes Mathias attorney Jameson E. Tibbs participated in an AI panel discussion at a recent Case Western University School of Law Journal of Law, Technology & The Internet symposium. Tibbs, a member of Lippes Mathias' intellectual property practice team, joined other professionals in the field of artificial intelligence (AI) at the event, which was titled "The Digital Frontier: Navigating the Future of Law in the Age of AI, NFTs, and Cybersecurity."

In addition to Tibbs, the AI panel featured Alfred Cowger, and Bryant Walker Smith. The symposium also included a cybersecurity panel and an NFT panel. The event brought together a diverse group of speakers, including an award-winning filmmaker, the president of Filecoin, and a cyber threat intelligence analyst, among others.

Tibbs assists clients with copyright matters, including licensing, protecting music, art and software; trademark matters; and patent matters in the technical fields of electrical engineering and computer science with a specific focus on artificial intelligence and adaptive systems.
